As much as I hate this shxx. I've never had time to complain. My mindset always been keep it pushing because I don't feel like these people owe me nothing. I never wanted to succumb to its suffocating grasp because the moment I feel wronged I have no immediate outlet for anger without putting myself in a worse position. There's so much that doesn't go as it's supposed to and so much corruption you really have nobody to complain to. No authority figure likes to admit when their wrong nor will they call the next one out when it clearly shows, see we offenders always get the bad end of the stick. They give offenders all the more reason not to trust them CO's, caseworkers, and so on. They need someone policing them who we offenders are able to communicate with regularly so it's a constant awareness on both ends.
