

Inside Looking In.

4-2-18

The American Model of incarceration is broke and broken. Dept. of Corrections throughout the land are the only businesses, and they are businesses, that produce a defective product and blame the product.

We are dealing with human beings and if society takes on the responsibility of incarceration, then rehabilitation or at least the true attempt at, must be part of the equation. The vast majority of prisoners at this very moment will be released some day. Although we may not move in next door to you, we will be standing in line next to you at the grocery store. We will be the ones fixing your car, the ones repairing your roof, mowing your lawn, picking up your garbage. You may not see us, but we will be there. What kind of person do you want that to be?

The laws that created many of our nations prison systems, specifically call for a maximum effort to be placed on rehabilitation, they for the most part are breaking this law. But how do you put them in jail? As more and more people become affected by the criminal system, more and more will emerge worse than when they went in.

Where's the justice in that?

Paul J. Liser
#58910