I have had an illness; it's been more than four years. It's a bleeding that I have in my stomach. There are some veins that blow out in the large intestine, which provoke bleeding when I go to the bathroom, or always. At the doctor's office, I have been seen by the doctors, but they don't want to operate because they say that's how my life is going to be, and they can't operate on me unless I am anemic because of lack of blood. I don't feel well because my stomach is always hurting, and I bleed too much. Not all the time, but every three weeks, or every two months, but it lasts two or three days. I always tell doctors that but they always tell me the same thing that they can't do anything that my organism is working well. But the way I see it is that these doctors are not qualified doctors because they never give me any medicine for my pain. What I am saying here is true; it's not a lie.
