"The law" is an ancient concept. And today that concept has revealed that Law does not always protect and serve, Laws change for that matter, but the damages they make are irreprehensible. The forbidden generally consists of regulations that are not allowed for the sake of control. Whether the control is for one's own benefit or for protection against someone else is important to look into. Things change and technology revolutionizes the implementations of regulations. Such as medicine revolutionizing the damages of certain symptoms which used to be avoided at all cost. We have leniency with forbidden subject matter. But a resurgence of the forbidden would be a mistake. The forbidden is tricky and deals with the potentially dangerous. The greater good is always the goal even when rules have to be broken. Much like the benefits that come after war, or an outbreak, or problems of any kind for that matter. I wish that laws really did employ the greater good. I wish I was able to use my knowledge to help the countless meaningless tragedies.

of the world. like how we deal with the unknown, such as drugs and mental illnesses which can be beneficial under the right circumstances.

But for me the forbidden doesn't mean the illegal, the forbidden has become knowledge, knowledge of the spirit of hell, and of the structure of reality. I know there is a God and that he is the keeper of the highest order. But when I see and feel the life I live with demonic influence, it feeds a wild imagination I feel is innate in every person spiritually alive. The demonic has its times of unwanted preformance but it also presents a nature that feels needed in faith. Experiences with hallucinations of beings made of light or visions in the mirror that shows Big Black eyes and dreams of shapeshifters and lucid abandoned worlds, make prison seem kind of worth while to have the time to take it all in.
