I realized to day that most of my effort in reading, thinking, and even in going into different states of consciousness is due to a fundamental desire to gather information of my own soul, spirit, or otherwise nature of the development of my life. I realized this by reading Jaspers' "The Encompassing" which defines being and its natures. I have gathered theories in my experience with hyper-sensitive states of mind that give insight to the spirit or "being" that processes all intelligence to our consciousness and sub-consciousness. I find the matter of the question is due to oppressive manipulation of stronger undomesticated spirits. The bloodline of the damned live today and makes their effect on humanity. But through interaction between the evil, mundane, and of the holy faith, I have learned our souls are always creating intelligence to be hold on to, or forgotten and ^{that} creates the nature of individual's lives. It is elusive because its secrets are guarded, it is felt as limitless and unobtainable until you ask yourself the proper questions such as why do we perceive sight, sound, touch, smell, and taste in the pattern we do. Once we begin to take hold of our senses we can begin to imagine methods that could give us the peace of mind that was wrenched at the beginning of this life is eternal and what we do on Earth is very essential to what happens to us after we leave Earth. Secrets of the spirit include dreaming and astral projection, teleporting, telepathy, telekinesis, precognition (predicting abilities), and spiritual manipulations. Everything we perceive through touch, sight, sound, smell, and taste effects our spiritual ability, and once we become involved in our perceptions we hold more ability to gather and use information of the world and thus encompass our selves and everything about us on a new map that we always desired. Through metacognition we face life with more tools. We choose to make sense of our decisions on another level that is as important as it is elusive.
