When people hear the word program the spark of potential is felt. It's akin to deja-vu in the sense we meet a glimpse of the bigger questions that revolve around us without usually noticing. It is elusive and alive or seems its way. And for that reason, I know those questions in a sense show parts of the future are planned and people follow commands.

Unfortunately programming in its noun tense isn't always good. Like in most things, abuse exists in programming. Though it's more a crime against others than for oneself. That isn't to say those who attempt to program others don't have regulation system to follow of their own. Instead of the criminal system, programmers have a psychic order known to some prisoners, mentally ill, and conspiracy theorists as the New World Order.

The New World Order correlates with theological views. It definitely deals with the supernatural and the foundations of religion. It accepts the belief of the existence of evil, and even though it doesn't mention the presence of God, it does show that Ignorance is punished.

Whether religion is the source of evil is where most of the theological and conspiracy theorists' views differ.

The Conspiracy theorists' view on the New World Order is that we live in mind control made by reptilians, shape shifters. While this is most likely true in my personal opinion, religion also says that the devil manipulates people's brains, which is also true in my personal view.

My view is more complicated than anything I read on the subject. I believe panpsychism and pantheism view on creation. I believe the devil but mostly God is always creating life. Thus, programming can be deconstructed in individuals who threaten the New World Order by the devil or God if they meet criteria to be terminated in this world. ~~psychic~~
The New World Order steals people's consciousness so I don't expect every one to "get it".
