

"Allegedly..."

11/21/20

How many people know what it feels like to be falsely accused? A lot of you maybe. But how many know, I mean really know, how it feels to have your life ruined because of these accusations?

And I don't mean "social media" ruined either. I mean "life in prison" ruined. How many can say that they know such pain truthfully? For those who can, they should not have to know such pain! Not at the hands of what is known as justice.

How do judges justify the allowance of testimony from a witness who is not in the least bit credible? Not even in the least bit believable? How do they sleep at night knowing that they have taken a person's future away based on the spoken word of another individual? My word against theirs, basically. How can judges stand the sight of their own reflection in the mirror knowing that they never believed, nor thoroughly investigated the allegations made by one who may have a personal vendetta against the accused? How does that happen in a court of law? A justice system? I simply do not understand.

I do not understand justice in this country; but especially within this commonwealth state of Virginia. I do not understand how they feel that the things they do are acceptable. Are justifiable. Are even reasonable. It is baffling to me. And to many others as well. Especially those of us who have had experience with this alleged system. Yes, altered. Tailor-made to fit those who are probably more guilty and deserving of punishment than many trapped behind these bars.

You do not only need to be caught to be a criminal. Some of those in authoritative positions are the worst kinds of criminals sadly.

And what happened to innocent until proven guilty? It seems that if some judges want you to be guilty, whether you are or not, will find you guilty without ever really proving anything at all. If a judge will not question a child who was close to someone who was accused of child molestation, how can he then justify sentencing that person to over 200 years in prison? It seems to me that these would be the types of testimonies a judge would render his decision based upon. Not

An empty accusation by a person with an ulterior motive.

So, if judges were to listen to, and believe, every charge brought against someone, what makes Donald Trump or the Lieutenant Governor of Virginia any less condemned? Any less guilty? Why were these men not prosecuted as well? Why not? Money? Politics? Where's the fairness in that? Is that justice? I think not! But sadly, it is what is allowed, though should not be.

Instead of only being fixated on how many they can imprison, they must become fixated on fact finding. Fixated on the real purpose of imprisonment. Fixated on truth. The saying holds true for them as well: The truth shall set you free!
