

"That Invisible Door"

When they took her it left my heart with a Permanent scar!
The day she was booked in — I was too to assess the loss.
But I grew stronger, tall and smart with every visit in momma arms.
I showed her my dances, School Grade advances,
And often asked when she was coming home.

She would say soon...

But sooner kept moving farther away.

At night I'd stare at the moon,
hoping tomorrow wouldn't leave us the same.

But nothing changed...

Though my faith grew stronger — that she would be free one day...

Our bond is magical; and filled with laughter!

"Love will always conquer hate."

So stranger I grew, and smarter too!

And on my promises the sun is still shining.

"I Love you momma!"

And outta nothing

I turned my life into something.

"But nothing compares to you being here waking up with me every morning."

But that time will come...

That time will come...

That time will come...

When momma comes home —

I want her to take steps at a slower pace,

And be as strong as I am;

And not fall for those traps that separates us.

I want her to feel beautiful;

After being caged in such a dirty place.

She deserves better!

And I'll be here to help her — to feel special just the way she was made.

"When momma comes home ..."
