Poem: The Moment

They Say: "Do The Crime, Do The Time".

What If You're Innocent?

What If You're An Officer Committing A
Malfaction?

Or You Committed A Transgression But Got Away.

What If You're A President Of A Country?

What If You Could Surge On Peoples
Privacy, And Be The Only World Power?

If I Did My Hard-Time Learning, And Uncovered All Of America's Misdeeds.

Slavery, Manufacturing Drugs And Guns, Wars
Over Crude-Oil, Conflict Diamonds, Natural Resources, You Name It.

Now I'm Considered A Whistle-Blower
Like A Referee, The Truths In Black
And White, I Call-Out Anyone

Making Mistakes In The Game.

It's Designed Unfairly, It's Rough And Violent Like Prison Sports.

Unless You Have The Complexion For The Connection, Or The Right Connections To Win Elections, Or Enough Power And Influence To Cause A Insurrection, Than You're Gucci.

Paran My Informal Slang, I Meant Opulent.

Living In Times When Women Could Marry Each Other, But Not Adulterate To Abort Kids.

Mother Nature Is Slowly Dying, People Are Cancer In Her Lungs And Throat.

At The Moment, I'm Heavily Back To The Future, The Present Don't Seem Promising.

Poem: The Moment

If Tomorrow's Not Promised To Realists,
Be Optimistic And Pliable, Today Is The Past In 24-Hours.

So Live For More Than Just The Moment.

The Moment You Realize The Power Of Freewill, That's The Moment You're Consciously Awoken.
