

How the prison system Succeeds! 12-11-21

When you ask a person in prison, to name something good about the prison system, they normally look at you like you asked them to explain the laws of physics. If you ask someone to tell you what the prison system succeeds at you may get a lot of answers, some good while others bad, depending on the person asking the question and the answer they're looking for!

Nevertheless I've seen the prison system succeed at a lot of things in which we will direct our attention.

The prison system in Texas succeeded at changing me for the better, it succeeded at stopping me dead in my tracks and helped me to reflect on the life I lived and the mistakes I made. It succeeded at taking all my responsibility away and for me to actually miss being responsible, therefore making me want to get out and be responsible.

The system succeeded at providing me time to learn by reading what benefits me and my community in the long run. It helped me to be motivated to work, even for free, just to get out of the cell block. It succeeded at teaching me humility and patience with long suffering. It taught me how not to take a single thing or person for granted, because anything could happen to them or me. It succeeded at teaching me to be a team player, for once one gets into trouble and suffers we all do.

The available education and resource can really rehabilitate anyone even the most depraved soul... one just has to have the determination to do it. The available time of being confined could benefit someone to drastically change.

I've seen this system succeed all the previous listed things, as well as it helps me to realize how grateful I was to treat family and friends good, or it teaches me with remorse because I treated them bad, most of all this place

Succeeds at punishing us for the offense and they get their money worth.

On the flip side it succeeds in so much more then what the original intent was, well maybe it was not the intent of America's founders thought it would succeed at, nevertheless the prison system succeeds at;

Taking us from our loved ones and making it almost impassible to continue any marriage or relationship, while taken hundreds of miles away from our loved ones. They succeed at creating a sub world ran by the outcast of society and gangs where unspoken violence runs rampant ran by different rules, with little to no constitutional rights, unless you suffer the consequences of speaking out.

This place succeeds at deindividualizing a person a makes them less of a human being and more like a number or worst cattle or slave. It takes the hope of many away, ~~not~~ even the second chance of ~~redemption~~ redemption or ever touching a woman or having kids or to be a respectable citizen.

This prison system succeeds at taking a one time offender and turning him into a carrier criminal and more mentally disfunctional then they came. It succeeds at making ^{you} forget, what it's like to drive, walk on beach or simply go to the fridge and making a sandwich. It succeeds at making you feel abandoned, lonely and rejected plus forgotten. The feelings that this place brings are numerous. Most of all this system succeeds at taking away our freedoms promised by the fore fathers.

This system succeeds never doubt, we as prisoners are stuck in the "Successfulness" of this place. Now wheather you are happy or unhappy about the first part or the second, well I suppose that is why we as humans have a voice to speak out on;

"How the prison system succeeds"
